

DR. JOHNSON was a great tea drinker. It used to be said of him that towards midnight, when he had finished his twentieth cup of tea, his conversation was irresistible, his logic unanswerable, he was at his greatest power. How many fluent talkers to-day owe their brilliancy to the invigoration of "original package" tea. If you want to know how clever you can be when you are at your best, try the experiment. Buy a pound of Chase & Sanborn's Package Tea in the original air-tight lead form. It is a native drink.

JESSE OVERSTREET FOR SPEAKER.

The next speaker of the national house of representatives should be none other than Jesse Overstreet. There are many reasons why it should be so. First, since the president is an eastern man, the speaker should come from the middle west, and of the states of the middle west Indiana is the logical state from which to choose the leader for the lower house. In the other states of this central group, the republicans are divided into factions, in Indiana we stand as a unit for republican principles with no personal machines to take care of. Cannon of Illinois or Babcock of Wisconsin, like Henderson, of Iowa, would, at times, lack the earnest co-operation of home congressmen. Every congressman in Indiana, and for that matter, every republican of Indiana, would be enthusiastic friends of the Indianapolis congressman. In the special place Jesse Overstreet is a man of the highest character and of superb ability. Not only is he a man of superior intellect, but as congressman and as a republican leader he never loses his head. His friends point with pride to the fact that during the eight years he has been in Washington he has not cast a vote that has not been approved by a majority of his constituents, and as a republican he has done nothing which has made trouble for his party. In other words, he has not only been a good congressman, but has been a good party man. Again his efficient service as secretary of the congressional committee should give him recognition at the hands of his party. His services on that most important campaign committee have been of a high order and have had and deserved the commendation of the party throughout the country. Jesse Overstreet then comes from the right part of the country, is a brainy man, a level headed republican never, a factionist, and should be the next speaker.

J. H. PETER'S CAMP.

A Delightful Place for an Outing.—Paradise for Hunters.

A visit to J. H. Peter's camp on the lake near the north county line furnished a most pleasurable half day sport yesterday.

The location of the camp has been admirably chosen. The buildings have been erected in an enclosure containing a grove of young walnut trees, carpeted with tall blue grass and on the bank of his private lake, about one hundred yards in width and a mile in length.

The main building is a two story log house, with a two story porch in front and a kitchen and pantry in the rear. The large open fire place filled with logs ready for lighting is suggestive of cheery comfort in cooler days.

The kitchen and dining room are equipped with all modern utensils, and the pantry and refrigerator are filled with stores of supplies necessary to sustain and cheer the weary hunter. This building has a history reaching back a century, which will form the subject for a future novel or romantic story. The upper story of this building is furnished with dressers, wardrobes and cots and kept for the use of lady campers and visitors.

To the right of the main building is a cottage for the gentlemen furnished in every detail for comfortable enjoyment, and to the left is a neat cottage for the use of the ladies presiding over the culinary department. And in the rear are extensive stalls and sheds for housing horses and vehicles, with a suitable cottage near by for the use of the hostler.

A driven well is conveniently located upon the ground furnishing excellent water, and hammocks and rustic benches are scattered throughout the grounds inviting the tired to rest, and the reflective to meditation.

When you rein up in front of this place and find J. H. "at home" ready to extend the glad hand, with his trained cook and expert hostler at your service, the picture of hospitality is complete—and you soon forget that you ever had liver complaint or a disordered stomach.

J. Herschel finds enjoyment enough in entertaining his friends. Mack St. John is desirous of making a record as a fisherman, and leads the way to the most noted points in the lake, and casts in his hook, baited with a whole bird. He says big fish bite only on big bait and he fishes only for big fish. He was waiting for a bite when the moon came up, but assured us that the neighbors should all have part of his fish this morning.

Jos. Hodapp worked industriously, killing a supply of birds for Mack to bait with, and at the conclusion of the day's work modestly expressed some doubt whether there would not be economy in eating the birds and not eating fish.

Fred Everback was dressed like a hunter, looked like a hunter, hunted like a hunter, ate like a hunter, and talked like a hunter, and if he didn't bring in game enough for tomorrow's supply it wasn't his fault. He excites other hunters and makes their aim uncertain.

Montgomery said he didn't expect to kill anything, but would just go out and train his dog awhile, or rather his half of a dog. He said on concluding his exercise that the dog had learned to lead right side up with a lack string part of the time, and if he could only get him over his fear of flushing the game, and to go in from and enjoy the sound of a gun he'd be alright; but if he didn't improve soon in this regard, in the language of Pudden Head "Wilson," he'd kill his half of that dog.

Fred Everback says the Editor missed a rabbit "settin on its nest," and killed a woodpecker on top of a tree. The Editor came into camp without the rabbit and complaining at the host for not moving the barn off the premises so rabbits wouldn't have anything to hide under.

The camp, with its sport, is a health restorative and a twentieth century success. Governor Darbin has spoken for quarters there and President Roosevelt is expected next season, and J. H. can take care of them in a manner becoming their station.

MEDORA.

We lost out last week as about the only item of note was an election in which a stranger could not discern the politics of different parties as every one was on the best of terms. But this peace of mind was disturbed Sunday morning when we awoke and saw suspended in the center of the street, just opposite the livery stable, a man made of muslin and large figured calico, wearing No. 10 boots and bearing the inscription on a card "I ran for justice, contest it boys." The citizens failed to see the funny side of such behavior and L. Ernst cut the wire that fastened it to his building and let the gentleman down. We have nothing to say. The act speaks for itself.

Jesse Everhart Meets with an Accident near Ft. Ritner.

Jesse Everhart, brakeman on the B. & O. S-W., met with a serious accident near Ft. Ritner Tuesday evening which cost him a foot. As the train was coming this way he tried to loosen one of the brakes by kicking it. In making the kick his foot slipped from the brake and was caught under the wheels. The foot was so badly crushed that it was necessary to amputate it above the ankle. He was brought to Seymour and Dr. Graessle assisted by Dr. Gerrish, performed the operation. He is today resting as comfortably as could be expected under the circumstances at his home on South Broadway.
